IDR: BI Holds Rate with USDIDR Staying Ranged

Bank Indonesia (BI) Holds Rates, Maintain Our Forecasts

Bank Indonesia (BI) in line with the consensus (according to the Bloomberg survey) held rates at 5.75% although our own in-house economist had been expecting a cut of 25bps. Despite, the majority of economists seeing the possibility of no move, the market in general appeared to have been expecting a cut ahead of the meeting. Indo GB yields had been on a decline whilst the IDR had been underperforming in recent sessions.

The central bank had noted that the decision was to encourage growth and keep inflation within the target range of 1.5 - 3.5% whilst also ensuring IDR stability in line with the fundamentals. In the statement, they had mention that they had also taken into account global uncertainty. BI also sees 2025 GDP growth between 4.7 - 5.5% whilst inflation would stay within the target of 1.5 - 3.5%. They also did recognize that the Fed policy cut may be more limited this year, expecting only another 25bps of reduction from them in 2H 2025.

However, we do not believe that the central bank is exactly substantially deviating from a dovish tone. BI actually still sees that there is room for further cuts albeit that it would depend on the global economic situation. Governor Perry Warjiyo had also noted that the central bank would support the government's priority programs. The decision to not move this time could be a reflection that the central bank is determined to keep finely balancing growth support with the IDR stability. The latter goal of IDR stability looks to be the main driver this time to hold, especially as the Governor did say, "stability is the most important thing for our economy to continue growing" and why they "continue to be in the market and maintain the stability of the rupiah". USDIDR has been holding within a range of 16200 - 16400 since the start of the year as the authorities continue to be in the markets daily whilst managing expectations of rate cuts. Going forward, the central bank decision would continue to have to factor in the pace of IDR movements whilst they keep a close eye on both the growth and inflation metrics. Our economist is expecting that BI would cut rates by another further 50bps this year to 5.25%.

Regardless of the decision today by the central bank, we continue to hold to our forecasts for the USDIDR. This points to a trajectory of trading higher in 1H 2025 before coming off in 2H 2025 and stabilizing. The pair's movement would be in line with other USDAsian pairs amid a persistently uncertain global environment where Trump has been consistently threatening to impose more tariffs. Even amid some market hope for trade negotiations at this point, there are certainly risks that the trade war between all sides can again intensify. Trump himself has also made early Apr a deadline for several important trade developments that include a study due on China's compliance with previous trade deals in addition to another one on reciprocal tariffs to be proposed. Also, it would also be known then whether the 25% tariff on Canada and Mexico would still carry on and if the 25% tariff on autos, chips and pharmaceuticals would come into force. Meanwhile, we also stay wary of how any Ukraine peace deal would pan out to be and its impact on Euro and USD appetite.

In the very near term, USDIDR looks like it could trade within 16200 - 16400 and the possibility of a move to the lower end of the range can occur if the broad dollar can come off further. The latter cannot be ruled out if trade negotiation hopes can hold up and US data does not come out too strongly. Key support levels for the pair stands at 16200 (bottom of the recent range) and 16000. Resistance is at 16400 (top end of recent range) and 16478 (2024 high). Momentum indicators are pointing towards the downside. On the fixed income side, we note that SRBI non-resident ownership looks stable even as rates have dipped. 10Y yield differential also remains stable also giving support for the USDIDR to stay sideways.
